Tata Sky Customer Care Number.Frequency conversion The frequency conversion is a highly discussed and also widely used process in electrical engineering. For example, it is essential for the conversion of radio waves to microwaves, the conversion of infrared light to visible light, the production of radar signals and the duplication of radar signals. Sometimes, the frequency conversion is also called transformation or multiplication. Depending on the frequency of the input signal and the required output frequency, different types of frequency converters are used. Various dielectric materials are used for this purpose, including crystals, metallic conductors and semiconductors. Description of the process Transition When transforming, it is necessary to solve the problem of the conservation of energy. Here, the basic consideration is the equivalence of the power. The frequency of the electromagnetic wave depends on the dielectric constant, the electric conductivity and the magnetic permeability of the material. Let's consider the following formula for the energy density in a dielectric material: where is the electric field intensity is the electric charge is the dielectric permittivity is the magnetic permeability is the magnetic flux density is the vacuum permittivity The energy of a wave is found using the equation: Where is the energy of a wave is the energy of the electromagnetic field is the energy density of the wave The absorption of energy of the waves occurs only when, that is when.
