odenal mucosal biopsy in patients with CD, allowing, in some cases, the diagnosis of other enteropathies or the confirmation of a diagnosis already made by histology or serology. It is noteworthy that microscopic examination of duodenal mucosal biopsy specimens showed CD-related changes in 75% of CD patients with normal duodenal endoscopic appearance. The method offers great sensitivity and specificity in detecting CD-associated changes and is well accepted by the patients. Duodenal PSC was diagnosed in 4 of 6 patients with CD and gastric PSC in 5 of 8 patients with CD \[@CR15\]. Thus, we could diagnose 5 patients with CD and PSC together with TNF α antagonists. There was a higher proportion of CD patients with UC or TNF α antagonist therapy in the duodenal ulcer group, while such patients were rare in the gastric ulcer group. However, the prevalence of previous CD was comparable between groups. PSC presents with chronic or recurrent abdominal pain, weight loss, and iron deficiency anemia. These symptoms are also common to CD, so the diagnosis of PSC depends on the exclusion of CD and other enteropathies \[@CR16\]. Therefore, to diagnose PSC, a diagnosis of CD must be ruled out. Importantly, PSC should be differentiated from other causes of chronic gastric outlet obstruction. Given its high association with CD, the possibility of PSC should be considered in patients with an elevated CRP level and chronic symptoms suggesting PSC. There are several limitations to our study. First, the retrospective study design is associated with a lack of certain baseline data and a limited sample size, especially for the analysis of duodenal PSC. Second, a temporal relationship between duodenal CD and PSC could not be established, since a long-term follow-up was not available. Third, we could not determine the effects of TNF α antagonists on the duodenal mucosa. Conclusions {#Sec5} ===== In conclusion, we found that duodenal CD is relatively common in patients with CD and PSC. Duodenal PSC might develop at the same time of CD and could be the cause of PSC. Moreover, duodenal CD is often asymptomatic, and as such may be overlooked when evaluating PSC. The administration of TNF α antagonist might be associated

Now Labour is also starting to pressure the leaders of its political allies, the Liberal Democrats, to join a move to have the government cap all employer pensions. So what exactly is the Liberal Democrats saying? And what is the government going to do? Here's all you need to know. What are the Liberal Democrats saying? The Liberal Democrats have put their pledge to freeze pensions to good use. (Image: Liverpool Echo) The party is arguing that the government must stay out of the pensions system completely and let private companies price pensions at their own discretion. The Liberal Democrats are also saying that the government should set a minimum as well as a maximum age at which people can claim their state pension. And, also, Liberal Democrats want a scheme that is affordable and fair for all. The Liberal Democrats are also calling on the government to set up a quango to set a minimum amount people pay for their state pension. So what are the government doing? (Image: Liverpool Echo) The government has agreed to go ahead with a new national pension auto-enrolment scheme from April 2020. Liberal Democrat MPs voted against this legislation and now it is headed to the Lords for a final debate on Tuesday. The government has agreed to cap all employer pensions at at least £10,000. The Prime Minister has also warned that future governments might have to go further to guarantee the future of state pension. The government has also promised to ensure the age at which people can claim a full state pension will be 70 for both men and women by 2028. What else? Speaking to the BBC after Christmas, Prime Minister Teresa May said: "From April 2020, employers will have to automatically enrol their staff in a defined contribution pension. "It means that from then the government will no longer give employers a blank cheque to set up pensions schemes. "We will be setting a minimum level for auto-enrolment pensions that will ensure workers will still have a decent pension when they retire."The pretty and the smart, join us for the best shows in all your senses!
