THE STATE. 66019. Court of Appeals of Georgia. Decided October 7, 1983. J. Laddie Boatright, for appellant. Frank C. Mills, District Attorney, Mary B. Bishop, Assistant District Attorney, for appellee. BENHAM, Judge. The defendant was charged with two counts of shoplifting. The first count was dismissed during trial by the state's motion, and the defendant was convicted of the second count of shoplifting. Sentence was subsequently imposed and the defendant appealed the conviction. The defendant enumerates the general grounds only. 1. The store detective who arrested the defendant testified that he saw the defendant shoplift a package of goldfish crackers and a bar of soap, weighing a total of approximately 1.7 ounces. The detective testified that after he saw the defendant take the merchandise, he began a surveillance of the store's parking lot. He stated that he saw the defendant walk to his car, stop on the driver's side and look up and down the street, after which he got in his car and drove away. The detective followed and stopped him a short distance

Description: More than a half-dozen Windows 7 programs were pulled from Microsoft's website last week in an effort to redirect users to the new Windows Store-based apps portal. Microsoft pulled Windows Media Player 11.0, Windows Live Messenger 10.0, Windows Mail 11, Windows Live Messenger 10, Windows Live Mail 11, and Windows Update 11.0 last week while replacing them with the Windows Store apps. Each app is completely different and designed to run solely in Windows Store. Some of the programs were pulled from the server immediately while others slowly. Over the past day, some of the removed software was still on the server as of Thursday afternoon, indicating that the software was immediately pulled from the server, but the official Windows Store portal was not updated with the new apps. Last year, Microsoft promised to bring the Windows Store to all Windows 8 and Windows 8.1 PCs. The new apps make it easier for users to download apps from the Windows Store, which is currently available only on Windows Phones, Windows tablets, and Windows 8-based PCs. Microsoft is starting to transition everyone over to the Windows Store by pushing the decision out gradually to Windows 7 PCs as the company said this week that Windows 7 PCs will no longer receive updates for Windows Media Player, Windows Live Messenger and Windows Mail. The move is a continuation of Microsoft's practice of pulling older Windows software over to the Windows Store but getting rid of the Windows installer and its optional add-ons. Microsoft is extending this tactic to Windows Live Messenger, Windows Mail and Windows Media Player, giving Windows 8 users a similar experience to Windows Phone users. Microsoft pulled apps from Windows Media Player, Windows Live Messenger, Windows Mail and Windows Update from Microsoft's web servers last week. The company also is redirecting users to the Windows Store for access to an updated version of Windows Update. Microsoft is pulling several Windows 7 programs from its web server and replacing them with the Windows Store, where users can now download apps for Windows. Microsoft will be moving all Windows Media Player users over to the Windows Store and stripping Windows Media Player 11.0 from the Internet in the next few days, representatives said Tuesday. The Windows Media Player team will no longer build new versions of the software, and Microsoft will be promoting "Windows Media Player" as the name for the Play To/Windows Store apps, but the company will continue to honor Windows Media Player as a legacy product.
